Two guest posters and a fun new blog

Unenumerated welcomes two guest bloggers for this summer. Mark Miller is a computer scientist who has been involved in the Xanadu hypertext project (a precursor of the Web), agoric computing projects, the E programming language, and much else. Jon Roland is an expert on the U.S. Constitution and related legal topics.

If you love Unenumerated, have some good ideas, and would like to guest blog this summer, please let me know.

The fun new blog involves Mencius Moldbug and the political idea he calls "formalism", which bears some resemblance to the idea of property in everything.

How fun! Mark Miller is one of the world's best computer scientists in the area of programming languages.

About Me

Nick Szabo

"A premier thinker about history, law and economics, and the lessons they have for security." -- Adam Shostack, Emergent Chaos

"Szabo comes out with these essays that leave me in awe." -- Brian Dunbar

"Reading material that is eclectic, challenging and endlessly fascinating." -- Sean McGrath, Propylon

"Like most blogs worth my attention, this blog is updated only infrequently. That is because the authors of blogs worth my attention only post when they have something to say that is true, relevant and not already known by their audience. Most of the human race does not have the skill to know when an idea has these three properties. The skill is particularly rare in the fields of politics and economics, which is why this blog is such a rare and valuable thing." -- Richard Hollerith
